A post-licensure study of the introduction of an injectable zoster vaccine was conducted in the United States. The pivotal efficacy trial demonstrated significant reductions in the risk of herpes zoster, and these data were incorporated into the licensure decision. The pivotal trial was also used to evaluate the safety of the vaccine. Eighty-one percent of patients were also enrolled in post-introduction safety surveillance. This analysis documents vaccine safety findings from this ongoing surveillance. The most common adverse events reported in the pivotal efficacy trial were pain at the injection site, headache, and injection site rash. Post-introduction, the rate of pain at the injection site increased to 11% in the first 6 months, and returned to baseline by 12 months. The incidence of headache, injection site erythema, injection site rash, and injection site pruritus were higher in the surveillance population than in the pivotal trial. However, injection site pruritus was transient and resolving by 4 weeks. The most common serious adverse events reported by patients in the safety surveillance population were fever and headache, and the most common serious adverse event leading to discontinuation was injection site pain.Q: SQL: The number of rows increase automatically every time query executes This is part of a.NET/SQL Server web service app. The operation simply inserts a row into a table.
