I like the fact that it generates dropdowns after you've created them. It's an easy program to figure out and use and it keeps reminding you of the fact that you're adding the dropdown you want to add it in the list of possible choices. The only downside is that you have to add a name for every dropdown you create. It's a minor setback. It's very easy to use. Drop Down Menu Maker Activation Code Review by tttttt (2002-07-02) If you want to impress your friends with how cool your computer's menu looks, this will do it. It's really easy to use, and it's very effective. I downloaded and installed this a few weeks ago. I've lost track of how many dropdowns I've made, and it's all on my web browser. This has made browsing the web much simpler and easier, and I also like the fact that it automatically adds links to the end of each line for you. Drop Down Menu Maker Product Key Review by Dave (2002-07-02) It really is as easy as it says. It's a pretty simple application, so it is easy to use. It's very easy to set the title of your menus and it's easy to create menus with custom names. It's especially easy to enter any HTML or text you want as items, and it's easy to delete them if you don't want them. In other words, it's an ideal dropdown menu generator. zygomatic area

Because health care costs and the volume of prescription drugs continue to increase, it is imperative that physicians and pharmacists collaborate in improving the quality, safety, and cost-effectiveness of drug therapy. The author describes one such collaborative effort between a medical center and a local pharmacy in which the pharmacy has received the authority to resupply physicians' prescriptions and to make exceptions to physician orders. Since the implementation of this system, pharmacists have provided physicians with a quality-control tool by serving as a "medication expert." Physicians have become accustomed to this new process, and the pharmacist has gained an institutional credibility in prescribing while maintaining a high degree of physician confidence. The collaborative effort between the pharmacy and physician has been met with positive response from both parties. Because of the positive results of this collaborative venture, similar endeavors will likely continue to flourish.
