With some of the top gaming titles like Call of Duty: Black Ops III being its exclusive content, Logitech G's latest device has everything to offer. Logitech is a well-known manufacturer of gaming hardware, but the company first took an interest in the gaming phone market. With the G910, it aims to make a name in the competitive smartphone segment as well. The gaming phone is currently available for pre-order online. This is due to get its global release some weeks after. However, the unit costs around $450. The unit is protected by a two-year warranty for defects. This gaming phone is basically a variant of the G900 09e8f5149f

The End User License Agreement for this product contains important information for this product. Read it. With the World Cup under way and StarCraft II still going strong, what better time for a quick review of a game that has been released over a year ago and featured in my March 2010 review? Five years ago, RTS games reached their highest point on consoles and the PC in StarCraft II, thanks to the huge success of the previous campaign, Wings of Liberty. After a few iterative patches and some player-made mods
