Born in London, he became well known for his "consistency of style" and "finely trained and intelligent" figures, which he painted in the mid- to late-1830s. In the 1840s he began painting cityscapes and landscapes, and by the end of the decade had transformed his style into the "neoclassicism" of the 1850s and 1860s. His work is held in many museum and public collections, and he was regarded as a leading painter in his day. His son was the art historian and writer Maurice Estève Hume-Williams. Early life William Hume-Williams was born in 1808 in a house in St Peter's Place, Clerkenwell, a stone's throw from the British Museum. His father, William Hume-Williams Senior, was a portrait painter and co-founder, in 1829, with Sir Thomas Lawrence, of the Royal Academy. Young William was sent to school at Mr. Gordon's academy in London, and when he was 16 his father sent him to Italy to gain some experience under the tutelage of Leopoldo Ciccone, a well-known painter then working in London. The two had met in Florence on a Grand Tour in 1818. While in Italy Hume-Williams produced a "fine head" of his father, which was held by the Royal Academy in that year. Early career When Hume-Williams returned to England he exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1832 to 1837, the last year with the Royal Society. In between he started to establish himself as a portrait painter.
