VirtualBox is a free and open-source, x86 virtualization product for enterprise as well as home use. It is available for Windows, Mac OS X and Linux under the terms of the GNU General Public License (GPLv2). VirtualBox does not require any redistribution rights and does not modify the licensed host operating system or hardware. VirtualBox is now part of the Open Source Initiative (OSI) as a free and open-source product. Enables you to run multiple operating systems at the same time on a physical computer. You can install as many operating systems as you want in a single VirtualBox installation without any compatibility problems, no matter whether they are 32-bit or 64-bit operating systems. VirtualBox is portable and can be run from removable media such as a CD, DVD or USB Flash Drive. The VirtualBox virtual machine (VM) is a thin layer on top of the physical hardware providing the abstractions required to share physical hardware between the guest operating system and the VirtualBox host. These abstractions include paginated IO emulation for disk devices and network packet IO. VirtualBox does not provide any kind of emulation of physical resources (hardware accelerators or sound card). Since VirtualBox cannot play audio or accelerate graphics, the guest OS does not need to have drivers for devices that are not used. Optimal Storage VirtualBox optimizes various data transfers to disk, such as clone, snapshot or image files. Each virtual disk is pre-allocated to the maximum file allocation size of the guest operating system. This also applies to other virtual disk types, such as thin-provisioned virtual disks. VirtualBox automatically creates fixed size files for some types of snapshots, such as clone disk images. The maximum size for the file allocation unit (FAT) on Windows is 16 MB. For other guest operating systems, the maximum size for the file allocation unit is not restricted. The guest operating system boots directly to its operating system, not the contents of the virtual disk as with other virtualization products. VirtualBox is not a file system, it does not provide any kind of file system. It does not support mounting or unmounting a virtual disk. VirtualBox does not require any resource reservations when creating a virtual disk. By default it uses a minimum amount of disk space (1 MB for FAT16 volumes and 4 MB for FAT32 volumes). VirtualBox can delete disk space used by a virtual disk when the last
