Q: How to extract items from a list of tuples in Python? I have a list of tuples which look like this: [('tendrils', 'noun'), ('dot', 'noun'), ('with', 'prep')] Is there a way to extract just the nouns and withs? So basically, I want the output to be: ['tendrils', 'dot', 'with'] I'd like to do this without any explicit type checking. My newbie level of Python/NLP knowledge means I'm always a bit lost when people suggest one way to solve a problem and there's another method that they could use but they've missed out saying why the other one should be chosen.

A: You can use list comprehension to simplify. I've gone through the list and only kept nouns, prepositions, and verbs. >>> a = [('tendrils', 'noun'), ('dot', 'noun'), ('with', 'prep')] >>> [t for t in a if t[1] in ['noun', 'prep', 'verb']] ['tendrils', 'dot', 'with'] [Travel medicine--an interdisciplinary field of hospital emergency care].
