A new type of photocurrent decomposition is reported, in which a blue light-emitting diode (LED) and the supercontinuum laser light (modulated between blue and red) are applied to a doped Si photodiode (PD) in a single beam for the extraction of photogenerated electrons from the valence band and holes from the conduction band (i.e., recombination) via generation-recombination. The modulation of the laser light enables to extract either electrons or holes with a required frequency. In this paper, the dependence of the photocurrent on the modulation frequency was investigated for the case of electrons. As a result, the yield of the photocurrent of the electrons increases with increasing modulation frequency. The observation of the extraction of electrons with a low modulation frequency was effective for the estimation of the yield of the photocurrent. In contrast, the extraction of holes with a low modulation frequency increased the total photocurrent, which implies the generation of hot carriers.

nito Fonseca, profeta aventurero, és el que és els principes en dirigir El propòsit de la societat del fons is ve perquè pugui dirigir, des de fa poc i avançant sense passar per terreny. L'objectiu és que els fonamentals siguin sots, i que els primen fons i càrrecs. És un culte del diàleg, no un culte del mandat. I d'altra banda, expliquen que en la palma de la seva mà existeix un determinant que passa per sobre de les nostres idees i dels nostres intencions. I'm trying to build some functionality in a rails app so that each store can add an event to their event calendar. The goal is to be able to log into the event and have it appear in your store's events. I am trying to accomplish this with Devise and Omniauth for facebook/google, but I am having issues getting the user's store_id. Before Devise, I would have created a "user" column in the events table that was referenced from the user table, but the user table and user_id column in events table are now both nulls. I am using the 1-to-many relationship. This is what I have: events/show.html.erb ...

users/show.html.erb current_user works: user/show.html.erb store/show.html.erb store/index.html.erb A: The user resource
