Physical activity and depressive symptoms in older adults: a population-based study of a deprived South Asian community. Depressive symptoms are common in older adults and are associated with worse health outcomes, especially in people of low socio-economic status. Physical activity is known to be associated with lower levels of depressive symptoms, but has been less studied in older populations of low socio-economic status. To determine the associations between physical activity levels, depressive symptoms and other risk factors for depression in older South Asian adults in a deprived neighborhood in the UK. A cross-sectional survey was carried out in London, UK, in 2004/2005. Four hundred and eighty-four ethnically homogenous adults (mean age 58.8 years, standard deviation 10.3; 92% South Asian) of low socio-economic status completed a questionnaire in their own homes. Self-reported physical activity levels and depressive symptoms were measured using the Exercise Questionnaire and short form Centre for Epidemiologic Studies Depression Scale (CES-D), respectively. Categorical associations with depressive symptoms and physical activity were analyzed using Chi-square test. Mean age-adjusted CES-D score was not significantly associated with physical activity levels (18.2 versus 18.6;  $P=0.8$ ). In unadjusted analysis, the association between physical activity and depressive symptoms was confined to active participants (26.3 versus 19.5;  $P=0.005$ ). Low socio-economic status was associated with worse depressive symptoms (47% versus 12%;  $P$ isolated vertigo in the older patient: associated causes and treatment. Older patients with severe, chronic, positional vertigo and no underlying cause may be misdiagnosed. This article reviews the assessment and treatment of isolated vertigo in the older patient. Potential causes of isolated vestibular dysfunction include idiopathic benign paroxysmal positional vertigo (IBPPV), benign paroxysmal positional vertigo (BPPV), central vertigo, presbycusis, other forms of dizziness, isolated vestibular neur

RNA (G-rich) motifs. 3.2. MicroRNAs {#s0075} ----- Besides TARs and TATA boxes, microRNAs (miRNAs) are another class of regulatory elements in eukaryotic transcription. miRNAs are evolutionarily conserved regulatory non-coding RNA molecules that mediate post-transcriptional gene silencing by targeting the 3' untranslated region (UTR) of mRNAs. One miRNA may target many mRNAs in various parts of the same organism by accessing their 3'UTRs, targeting their 5'UTRs, or both. Apart from their role in gene expression, miRNAs have been shown to modulate cellular proliferation and apoptosis. The human genome contains over 1000 miRNAs and it is estimated that the proteins they generate may control approximately half of human genome expression. The role of miRNAs in cancer development remains a topic of active research. Over 20 miRNAs have been implicated in tumorigenesis, showing oncogenic or tumor suppressor activity ([@b0050], [@b0055]). A recent study by [@b0110] used a combined miRNA/lncRNA expression signature to identify miRNA signatures capable of discriminating breast cancer subtypes with a prognostic significance. In addition, the authors found, using a novel experimental approach, that miRNAs can be released and carried by exosomes to distant cells, indicating that miRNA transfer may be a relevant mechanism for intercellular communication. 3.3. Long non-coding RNAs {#s0080} ----- A novel class of regulatory RNAs has recently emerged, the long non-coding RNAs (lncRNAs). LncRNAs are long, non-coding RNAs (>200 nt), with limited or no protein coding capacity. They show tissue and developmental stage specific expression in humans ([@b0105]). LncRNAs are also regulated in response to different stimuli. Several studies have demonstrated that lncRNAs have a role in transcriptional, translational and post-translational regulation and in cell cycle and apoptosis regulation ([@b0130]). They also participate in DNA damage repair mechanisms and in cellular senescence ([@b0075]). LncRNAs, also named enigmatic regulatory ncRNAs (eRNAs), are known
