This project is completely focused on the creation of a realistic looking and driving simulation game. Simulate the realistic city bus, including driving within traffic systems. Players control the bus, and the bus drive itself without having a need to manage the technical aspects. This game is using Unreal Engine. Simulating city traffic where you have to cross busy streets and parked vehicles. Preload driving some of the traffic lanes, including the streets at the bus stop. Different routes and types of routes for passengers to travel. Different weather conditions. Unique special buses such as vans, delivery trucks, trash trucks, etc. The purpose of this project is to test the hypothesis that male mice exposed during their sensitive periods of development to neurotoxins like lead may be more susceptible to the subsequent administration of drugs that produce behavioral or biochemical changes that are dependent on the monoaminergic neurotransmitter systems. This project will allow us to evaluate this hypothesis by examining the influence of lead administration during different periods of development, and during early postnatal development, on the ability of mice to respond to noradrenergic and serotonergic drugs in adulthood. Six species of snails belonging to the family Toxopneustidae were collected from rivulets in two regions of the Yucatan Peninsula. These species are: Toxopneustis emarginatus (Boury, 1859), Toxopneustis psammathus (A. Adams, 1854), Peptonia (Toxopneustis) inagai (Díaz Vázquez & Cruz-Barraza, 2016), Peptonia cenefera (Michelin, 1853), Toxopneustis reticulatus (Perrey, 1829), and Toxopneustis angulatus (Pfeiffer, 1859). The taxonomy of T. emarginatus (Boury, 1859) was revised and the status of Peptonia (Toxopneustis) inagai (Díaz Vázquez & Cruz-Barraza, 2016) was determined. T. emarginatus, P. cenefera, and T. angulatus were all collected from Dzemul and other small, coastal, and spring-fed creeks. T. reticulatus and P. psammathus were both collected in creeks located in a network of both rural and urban lands in southeastern Yuc

In Just Jump In! is a 1942 American comedy film directed by George Marshall and starring William Paley, Alan Hale, and Robin Wagner. The screenplay was written by Geoffrey Homes, John Twist, and Jack Alexander. The plot follows a young couple who become entangled with a men's nudist colony while they vacation on a train. The concept was pioneered by producer Jean Sharkey, who worked with Alexander on her 1922 silent film With or Without You. Just Jump In! was one of three "nudist" films made by the Paley/Sharkey team, along with the 1943 comedy films The Adventures of Mark Twain and American Film and American Film Studios. The film was released on November 8, 1942, by Republic Pictures and grossed $2.2 million. It has received mixed reviews from film critics. Most liked it due to its comical plot and final line from William Paley. Since then, the film has had a cult following and is often cited as one of the best American comedy films. Plot In 1950, Will Eastman is a young engineer living in L.A. with his wife Lisa. After a tiring day of work, they settle down on a bench on their front porch with a bottle of beer. Lisa reflects on their future plans as they talk about things like going to Hawaii, saving some money, and travelling to Europe in a couple years. She then recalls their recent getaway to Napa Valley, California, a month earlier, where they hit it off with Donald Lawrence. Donald invited the couple to join his men's nudist colony, where the entire community lives an existence free from sexual inhibition. As part of their vacation, the time also coincides with the April Easter Holiday, and the owners of the train line which Donald runs, Matt and Hank, are throwing a party. Brian is an eager beaver, whom everyone calls Buzz, and he is ready to take on any challenge. He is in charge of the party, and he assigns everyone to a different job. Will and Lisa are given the job of being on the grill, and Matt and Hank want them to be their cooks. To each other's dismay, Brian blurts out that they don't cook anymore after a recent breakup with his wife, who revealed a fondness for meat. While Lisa and Will start off on their job, Donald arrives with a boat full of watermelons, starts a small fire down by the dock, and brings down a pile

MadRobot X is a polished oldschool inspired shooter where players must help just the head of a giant killer robot escape from the mad scientist's lab where it is being created by blasting away at an armada of automated security using a giant overpowered laser that has been smartly woven into the overall game design. There are two gameplay modes, exploration and combat. There are both available at the start, though combat is the only gameplay available after chapter 9. Exploration covers a wide variety of levels such as a living room, a factory, the surface of the earth, and space. Combat has players defend the titular head of the robot from enemy attacks using a variety of weapons including lasers, firearms, and explosives. Combat has several levels of difficulty, from normal to extreme. There are also local and online multiplayer options. Combat There are two types of enemies that attack a player's robot head. There is the "type one" enemy that covers the side of the robot face, and the "type two" enemy that covers the head front. The type one enemies can be destroyed and your laser or firearms can take the type one cover off, revealing the robot's side-facing robot frame. The type two enemy can be killed only with firearms. The other enemies that follow the robot are type two, and they can be killed with firepower. There are two kinds of weapons. Laser weapons consume a certain amount of energy to operate, and each shot can be fully charged or partially charged. The only ways to get more energy are by taking energy from defeated enemies, tapping on areas that have energy crystals, or the "Boost" option. After a certain time the energy can be used to upgrade the laser weapon. This upgrade can include a higher damage, faster firing rate, and faster rate of energy consumption. The other weapon is the regular firearm, which can be fired multiple times by tapping the touch screen. The first two shots are a charged shot, which deals slightly more damage than a standard shot. Each successive shot has less damage than the previous. The most powerful shots can have a high damage, but the recharge time takes a long time for this to happen. Enemies have health levels as well as a maximum amount of health. Enemies that can be killed with a laser usually have an above-average amount of health. Enemies that take a lot of firepower to kill are usually below average in health. There is a limited amount of health for the player's robot head. There
